SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

Betting is not an argument; it is simply the means by which some people express their confidence in certain things, persons or events, and the announcements that so-and-so is putting up a certain quantity of money or other valuable against like commodities belonging to some one else on the happening of certain circumstances, is of itself a matter of no special consequence to those in search of information. It is, then, only a question as to whether or not those who thus place their money or valuables are better informed than others and by such means are seeking to increase their capital, to those who are not engaged in that kind of business. If the professional gambler, or to modify it, better, places large odds or any odds upon a certain event to come, it is only useful to the average citizen as a "pointer." Relying upon the fact that he who bets has made a study of the subject in controversy, others are at liberty to accept his risk and consequently his judgment as being carefully and deliberately formed for among the best of all human reasons—that he expects to profit thereby. This it is that makes such widespread wagering as occurs just before any important event in this country a subject of noteworthy interest and concern.

The wires of late have been ominously silent on the subject of how the great speculators in the east and west were placing their money with reference to the impending Presidential election, albeit they are burdened day after day with reports "drips" from the Democratic to the Republican party. The general reader is apprised of the facts which reach us by mail every day that there is a great deal of "flopping" going on the other way, and that many of these relate to men and newspapers high in social and literary circles; in fact, that these latter incidents greatly outnumber the others. That is the reason the telegraph does not bring them. All great capitalistic concerns, all monopolies, and absolutely all "trusts" are for the Republican cause, because they are of it and by it, and the Associated Press does not propose to stand in its own light. It is for Harrison, just as it was for Blaine, for Garfield, for Hayes and for Grant. It does not now send us word or give us an intimation of how betting stands in professional circles for obvious reasons. It gave such spicy details for a few days after both candidates were in the field, then dropped it. It is extending much too much charity to say that the dropping was because such information is not specially moral, because we receive from that same source continually details of prize fights from the first round and the first blood to the knock-out, and all kinds of horrible, exciting, scandalous and prurient events; nor can it be that it regards such matter as uninteresting, because to a great many people it is very interesting, and the A. P. so regarded it for a while. No; there is another and more apparent reason. It is because such information produces an impression, and that impression adverse to the Republican party. Only that and nothing more.

A gentleman recently from California—one who mingles with the moneyed class and represents a large syndicate there—was in this city yesterday, and he imparted some information that was refreshing, not because of its quality particularly, but because it was somewhat out of the regular order of the news bureau which transmit their intelligence by wire. He announced that the president of a prominent bank of San Francisco and a millionaire many times over, is anxious, but in vain, to have somebody cover his money at trifling odds against himself on the general result of the Presidential contest, he being willing to venture thousands or even millions, on Cleveland's success. He is also willing, as our informant states, to bet two to one that the Democrats carry California and greater odds that they carry Indiana. As he gets no takers, he proposes to go through the State on a backboard and take all the wagers, great and small, he can get, on the best terms he can obtain, against the success of the Democracy in November. Now, as we said before, this is not argument, nor is it necessarily an indication of how things are going; but it is an indication of one man's faith and is but a reflex of that of many more, and we don't get these things by telegraph.

It is really beginning to look as if the Democrats were going to sweep the deck; in fact, the latest emblem of the party is a broom held by a gilt holder on which are the portraits of Cleveland and Thurman.

A DISPATCH to that reliable paper, the Chicago Globe, announces that the Democratic club of Ramsey, Illinois, presided over by Hon. John M. Price, the largest wool-grower in the county, held a large open air meeting last week, which was eloquently addressed, and the following evening it held a business meeting, which was harmonious and enthusiastic. Democrats are confident and aggressive, Republicans despondent and defensive. Fayette County, in which Ramsey is situated, will, it is predicted, increase her Democratic majority of 500 to 700. Wool-growers elsewhere seem to have no difficulty in belonging to the right side; it is only in Utah, where votes don't count, that such things exist. Perhaps this is because there is no other means by which the owner of a ducer or so of the wooly nuisances can let the public know he has them.

SOME of the Republican papers are complaining because Mr. Harrison, the Indiana gentleman, is being overworked. He is on dress parade at home every day and is now making a tour in the wake of the gallant Thurman, and they fear serious results. Don't be alarmed; let Harrison go right ahead with his work. He will have plenty of time to rest after the 6th of November.

THOMAS NAST, the cartoonist, will not support Harrison after all. He has joined the staff of the Daily Graphic, and his pencil will thus be enlisted in the service of the Democracy. Nast is generally on the side that has the heaviest financial artillery; but it is a significant fact that the side he was on has invariably won.

It is announced that that brilliant little body whose name has always been Kate Field and will probably always remain that, is going to lecture in the east on the virtue of California wines. We are glad Katie discovered virtue in something while she was in this neck of timber.

MINNIE DAVIS, daughter of the great Confederate chieftain, is having a fine time visiting in Maine. She walks over the soil made sacred by the presence of Blaine with as much unconcern as though she had a right to.

THE CINCINNATI Commercial-Gazette says that "Mrs. Sheridan is still young, being thirty-five and beautiful." This is the kind of consolation which a blatant Republican sheet gives to a lady mourning over the loss of her husband.

THE SPEECH of the grand old Roman at Port Huron was coming along in dribs and drabs, but judging by what was received at a late hour, Mr. Thurman has lost none of the vigor of his youth nor the intellectual force of his riper years.

NEW YORK proposes a monument to General Sheridan. If memory serves us rightly, it also proposed one to General Grant.

WE ARE able to announce this morning that President Cleveland's letter of acceptance has not yet appeared.

NOW is the time to look out for meteors. You may not see any, but you can look all the same.
